To further characterize the actions of aminophylline on the cardiovascular system, we examined the effects of this agent on specific cardiac functional parameters in the cat. The average values for heart rate, mean arterial blood pressure, left ventricular systolic pressure, left ventricular end-diastolic pressure, and cardiac output were not altered significantly following the administration of either 10 or 30 mg of aminophylline per kg body weight. However, significant decreases in the maximum rate of rise of left ventricular pressure, maximum rate of decrease of left ventricular pressure, and maximum rate of rise of left ventricular pressure/maximum rate of decline of left ventricular pressure were observed following the administration of 10 and 30 mg/kg of aminophylline. These decreases were not associated with significant changes in dp/dtmax or dp/dtmin. The doses of aminophylline employed had no significant effect on the total peripheral resistance or the mean arterial blood pressure. Thus, in the cat, aminophylline causes decreases in systolic and diastolic blood pressure and maximum shortening rate of left ventricular muscle, without altering cardiac output.About With over 5 million hit 1cb139a0ed
