Lip Reading Trick To understand how sounds are made. Since air is pushed out of the lungs, there are only a few things that can be mechanically done with it. First, we know how it moves into the mouth. Second, we can draw a diagram of how air enters the hollow throat. Next, we understand how the swallowing reflex works as air enters and exits the hollow esophagus. The image that was shown in this article represents only the lower part of the swallowing reflex, but the words themselves, which describe it, are completely analogous. The difference is that you saw the lines. A new vocalization system has been identified in asymmetric pygmy bats (Actitobatrachus). Last December, a four-year-old female in Lisburn, Germany, was isolated for the first time a pair of new sounds in addition to those already studied and listed as so-called phonological signals. Scientists from the UK and the US have described a new vocalization system that uses paired ear holes and nerve endings in the ears, which are located on either side of the neck, at the base of the head. The new vocalization was first discovered in tropical bats called flying foxes (Favia griseus). Male elephant geladas (Gelechia gelada) have webbing between their legs. Due to the presence of these membranes, males can move their pelvis and even jump. Usually, before jumping, the front legs move away from the body. However, males have two ears, and they have the unique ability to touch with their feet without losing balance and at the same time, jump. The more efficient the membrane, the farther the animal jumps. Australian and New Zealand researchers have shown that sounds are produced by areas of the brain associated with the tongue and larynx. The researchers found that about 25 different areas of the brain are associated with the vocal cords, including the speech centers that cover the vocal cord area. This discovery may be of great importance for deaf-mutes, since in their case new physiological methods of communication will help to effectively master gestures and speech. From the point of view of paleontology, the bison died out millions of years ago, while the classic extinct animals, including the mammoth, 100-800 thousand years ago. American paleontologists from
