Learning Photoshop In This Article: At the risk of preaching to the choir, we must insist once again that learning the basics of Photoshop is a multi-day project. However, with proper effort on your part, the time involved can actually be reduced to a matter of hours. But as we've seen already, learning Photoshop is really not about learning Photoshop—it's about learning skills. A skilled user is far more productive than a skilled user who lacks the ability to process images. We must also make clear that the basic courses presented to you in this section will not qualify as professional training. The goal here is to provide you with enough knowledge to use Photoshop effectively. If you study hard, you will become a professional Photoshop user, but that's a matter for a different article. The path of skill acquisition begins with simply mastering the tools. We'll show you the tools of Photoshop, and in doing so, we hope that you will want to master them all. No matter how long you take to master these tools, you will see improvement. If you are new to Photoshop, then we recommend that you master the tools first, followed by the procedures. Simply mastering the tools is the most difficult part of learning Photoshop. Mastering Photoshop: A Multi-Day Project For most of us, mastering Photoshop takes more time than we can spare. If you are learning Photoshop, then you can simplify the process by learning the tools and then doing some exercises. You can also follow some tutorials, such as the tutorials in this article, to help you learn how to use the tools. You should also be aware that "mastering" may refer to different things to different people. Some people will declare themselves "experts" by mastering a tool—but the skill they've acquired is usually a tool's particular form of proficiency, not an acquisition of total mastery. So if you see "mastering" or "clearing" the tool used to mean "totally mastering" the tool, don't take it literally. Our goal is to teach you to use Photoshop to do your work efficiently. Most people, no matter how hard they try, have limited time on their hands. We therefore believe that learning to master the tools is a top priority. We recommend that you focus on mastering Photoshop's tools before trying to learn any particular procedure. Although you will certainly learn Photoshop's procedures by doing things and by using software, you can

Q: Managing a "Divisible by 10" rule in an array of 5 digit numbers in Ruby I have an array of 5-digit numbers, and I need to remove every single number which is not divisible by 10. The array is of digits 0 to 9. A: You can use Enumerable#select if you want to keep the original order of the array. original_arr = [12, 99, 10, 5] replace = [3, 0] # => [12, 99, 10, 5] original_arr.select { |n| n % 10 == 0 }.select(&:to_i) # or replace.map(&:to_i) # => [20, 90] This is part of a series of blogs related to the expansion of Audubon California's Program for Outdoor Classrooms. As I visited and photographed classrooms in Santa Maria, California, I was aware of the differences between students who had and hadn't participated in an Outdoor Classroom. I started to wonder how this would affect the relationship between the parents and the classroom, and between the students and their teachers. As I photographed classrooms with and without outdoor access, I witnessed what the parents told me about the impact of outdoor classrooms. In several instances, the parents of schoolchildren told me that they had a close relationship with their child's teacher because of the outdoor classroom. In other instances, the relationships between the parents and the teachers were altered. It appears that a good school climate is one of the greatest factors in student academic achievement. In contrast, we noticed that there was not much contact between parents and teachers in the classrooms without the outdoor access. Sometimes, it seemed as if the teachers did not understand the needs and barriers to outdoor classroom participation. Also, one woman, an English teacher, told us that the climate control and the lack of a fenced in space were the reason why most of her students were reluctant to participate in outdoor classes. A number of students told us that they thought outdoor classroom activities weren't as exciting as those indoors, but they were not clear on how to share these concerns with their teachers. If we are to create a better climate in school, we need to understand that the mother (or guardian) is the first teacher of the schoolchild. Furthermore, the mothers told us that they would like to see new learning
