presence of antibodies against dengue and chikungunya viruses. The antibody positive sera were further tested for dengue virus neutralizing antibodies using the plaque reduction neutralization test. Out of the 110 sera, 34 (31%) were positive for dengue virus antibodies by ELISA and 4 (3.6%) were positive for chikungunya virus antibodies. None of the sera tested positive for both dengue and chikungunya. One of the chikungunya positive sera was also positive for dengue antibodies. It is concluded that a considerable proportion of the indigenous persons in this dengue-chikungunya endemic area of Kenya were positive for dengue virus antibodies. What does the key mean?.The present invention relates to stents used to be introduced into body lumen, such as blood vessel, ureter, etc., and stent devices used to extend the stent to the target portion. Various metal stents have been developed in the past in order to prevent restenosis in the lumen of the body, such as blood vessel or ureter. A typical stent is composed of metallic wire mesh to allow the stent to be cut and crimped by rollers. Such stents normally have a thin diameter and are inserted and introduced by a catheter or a sheath. In particular, an end of the stent is expanded by a balloon catheter and is pressed by this balloon toward the ostium of the blood vessel. This makes the stent expand from the initial thin diameter to a larger diameter. In the stent having a thin and small diameter, the stricture of blood vessel is prevented, and allows easy insertion of the stent. However, such stent normally has the problem of restenosis. For this problem, various stents have been developed and used in the past. These stents are stents capable of preventing restenosis and maintaining lumen patency by acting as a scaffold. The scaffold-like stents maintain the lumen patency by cell proliferation therein, and prevent restenosis by cell growth of the subintimal layer. The stent function as a scaffold to hold the lumen of the blood vessel open and prevent restenosis by promoting cell proliferation. However, the stent with the thin diameter has a problem in that it is hardly retained in the blood vessel for a long period. This also has a problem in that it is easily collapsed by an external force applied thereto, in particular, after it has been exposed in the lumen of the blood vessel. A typical example of this stent is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,670,161, wherein a stent with a thin diameter is formed by cutting a stent tube e79caf774b
