First, if I can connect some small bit of a word up to the Literary Renaissance I tend to be pleased, for instance I liked the RT review of the Old Yeller books. I would also expect the LRB to carry out a standard review process which we see in the theatre and with the recording industry. To refuse to edit or eliminate boring or trivial text, to choose only the best of an evening or a week of shows, to highlight great and ignored plays, to praise and review good actors and directors, to examine the elements of a great play or a play that is simply unutterably clever. Those in newspapers seem to be doing this but this is an important difference. I also see reviewers as a publisher's agent, looking at their books and recommending what they might commission, a look at their page to see if there are any gaps in their range, so to speak, and what books are missing. For instance I would expect Shakespeare to review at least

Shakespeare, and the actor who directed Timon of Athens would review Timon and Other Shakespearean Monuments. So, it's not so much a matter of being seen as recommending some stories which can have a longer lifespan. In d0c515b9f4
