(See the sidebar "Multiple Windows and the Timeline" later in this chapter for details.) It's based on the Adobe Creative Suite, which can also be used for other tasks, such as Web design. The current version of the software is called Adobe After Effects. For the moment, Adobe Premiere Elements is the only "lower-end" editing program, although InDesign and Illustrator (for designers) offer much greater functionality at a lower price. The program's name is obviously inspired by the venerable video editing program that preceded it. Creating a sequence, or clips, of a video requires a pretty sophisticated set of tools for editing together many smaller clips. But the basics are pretty easy: 1. Play a short clip of video. 2. Play another short clip. 3. Click the record button, or press the space bar to record the whole clip and save it to your hard drive. 4. Play a third clip. 5. Click the play button, or press the space bar to play a clip from the sequence. 6. Repeat Steps 4, 5, and 6 to play the clips in your sequence. Eventually you get a rough idea

In 2013 a new governor took office in Illinois who was ready for a change. The previous governor who was re-elected had become entrenched and unresponsive to the needs of Illinois, his governorship was in trouble. Illinois was in crisis, as economic troubles intensified the state was teetering on the edge of bankruptcy. The last two state budgets had been unable to get passed and the highly anticipated budget stalemate that every state faces in the dead of winter brought politicians to the edge of their seats. The previous governor had cancelled a vote on a budget that took care of the state's obligations, an action that could have resulted in a state spending cut for 2013. With the budget stalemate not making progress one legislative group proposed an alternate budget that would allow the state to continue to operate. This alternate budget was sent back to the state senate to vote on so the governor could sign it. The state senate refused to accept the alternate budget. Soon a new alternative budget had to be worked out for the state to remain solvent. During this time, the governor was able to work out an alternate budget with the senate and the House. This alternate budget meant an end to the stalemate over the budget; there would now be a new budget. The new governor wanted to be a strong and decisive leader, a leader that would restore confidence in the state and get the state out of its mess. The new governor also wanted to be careful that he was not the fall guy, so he refused to sign the budget. The new governor sent the state senate and House back to negotiate, hoping to reach a compromise. Over the next few weeks they worked to draft a compromise. The two houses worked together to send a compromise that included issues that they both agreed on. The compromise bill was signed by the governor on Thursday, February 15. On Tuesday, February 20, 2013, the Illinois House and Senate went into executive session to pass the new budget. As a result of passing the new budget, the state stopped spending money and one more week of budget stalemate was avoided. This new budget included expanded gun safety laws, a ban on same-sex marriage and an increase in corporate taxes. Most of these changes were opposed by the previous governor and legislators, but due to a

What's New In?

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has issued new guidelines for tackling the Zika virus, suggesting that people wait until they are well to conceive and telling women to avoid sex when they are pregnant. Officials continue to be baffled and concerned by the link between pregnant women infected with the virus and babies born with a rare birth defect called microcephaly, in which babies are born with abnormally small heads. On Friday, as Brazilians turned out to celebrate World Cup soccer on Copacabana Beach and World Health Day, Brazil officially became the first country to confirm a microcephaly case in a person infected with Zika. The CDC now says that women of childbearing age should wait to become pregnant for at least six months after they are infected with the virus, and that, for women already pregnant, they should wait for at least eight months after the infection. Protesters in more than 90 cities across the world have taken to the streets today to oppose the mass surveillance state of the National Security Agency (NSA). At noon, activists from organizations such as the Free Press, Demand Progress, Fight for the Future, the Center for Democracy & Technology (CDT) and the New America Foundation marched to a variety of public buildings to demand that the NSA stop warrantless surveillance. The NSA had been storing millions of ordinary phone records as part of a massive, years-long program that was exposed earlier this year. Advertisement: This is the third time since December that the NSA has been openly challenged on issues concerning civil liberties and privacy. Last December, Facebook chief executive Mark Zuckerberg sent a clear message that he was willing to stand up to the agency after it was revealed that the NSA was targeting the communications of German Chancellor Angela Merkel. Then in February, Snowden delivered an address to a Washington audience. In that speech, he set off a political firestorm that has swept the U.S. Congress, forcing it to temporarily shut down the NSA. On the one hand, the NSA scandal has complicated matters for the White House. The administration initially claimed that any phone records collection being conducted was authorized by Section 215 of the Patriot Act, which is used to collect information about the terrorist threat to the United States. As of March 11, however, President Obama announced that the NSA was, in fact, spying on phone calls. Advertisement: But of course, the NSA has always claimed that it was acting legally. This latest public protest takes place
