Even if he left the scene as chairman of cricket, the former England captain was involved in a decision which created such a controversy that the sport's governing body implemented a lengthy legal investigation to determine whether his actions were in contempt of the spirit and/or the letter of their code of conduct. Harmison was England's wicketkeeper in that 2003 World Cup final when Australia defeated India in the second semi-final at The Oval. As the last man to take guard, the experienced Steve Waugh was on his knees looking for a slight edge. To this day, it is not known how Harmison reacted, but it was reported that he shook his head 'yes'. By his own admission, he had 'a bit of a chat' with Waugh, and that he picked up the slip cordon and called for a single. "All I remember is that I was talking to Steve Waugh on the outfield and it all happened so fast," Harmison told The Telegraph. "We had a conversation, I called for a single and then I picked up the slip cordon. It's a bit of a blur." He went on to say that it is common for teams to use a signal to communicate, but he hadn't expected that to be so serious. "I'm sure I'm not the only one, but I've never put anything like that in words. I've never said 'single'. I've just done what I've been told, and it's the same with England and others." England Today (ET) reached out to sources at the ICC to confirm how
