The association of multiple neurological sequelae with Epstein-Barr virus (EBV) infection in children has been recently reported in several single case reports. We report the case of a girl with progressive CNS symptoms, cerebellar ataxia, neuropathy, mononeuritis multiplex and pancytopenia associated with EBV infection. The presence of severe EBV-specific cytotoxic T-cell responses and of genetic factors not directly related to known T-cell receptors may play a role in the development of this immunodeficiency syndrome.Friday, November 9, 2014 Groups; A Good Group I want you to picture in your minds eye a mom who is a single parent with five children, all children of her own. I want you to picture that mom who is exhausted after a long day of working full time at a job to provide support for her children, trying to balance getting all the kids to and from their various activities, make sure everyone is getting the nutrition they need, make sure that they are actually in good enough shape to do their activities and that she is up to speed to make sure she knows what is going on and that she isn't leaving something out. I want you to picture that mom getting up on Saturday morning. I want you to picture her getting up on Sunday,
